THE Quezon City government has launched two internship programs of on-the-job experience for aspiring veterinarians and senior high school students.

"Through this program, we hope to inspire the next generation of veterinarians and animal welfare advocates. By providing them with real-world training, we are not only investing in their future but also in the health and safety of our community," Mayor Joy Belmonte said.

"This initiative reflects Quezon City's dedication to education, public health, and responsible pet care," she added. The Quezon City Veterinary Department (QCVD) has implemented a work immersion program for graduating high school students through a signed memorandum of agreement with the Quezon City Science High School.
