A child development center for children of police officers will rise at Camp Crame after a memorandum of agreement was forged with the Quezon City government under the leadership of Mayor Joy Belmonte yesterday. The Quezon City government, Philippine National Police and PNP Officers' Ladies Club (OLC) Foundation signed the agreement for the provision of the children's facility at the police force's main camp.

Present during the signing at city hall were Belmonte, PNP chief Gen. Rommel Marbil and OLC Foundation adviser Mary Rose Marbil.

Belmonte said it is the local government's way of expressing gratitude to the police for keeping their communities safe from criminals.

"This is a symbol of Quezon City's extended support not only to the police force but also to their families," Belmonte told reporters in an interview.

Under the agreement, the city government will provide the teachers, curriculum and learning materials for the students while the OLC Foundation is in charge of the facility.

Marbil lauded the city government for its assistance in the education of the children of police officers, saying he was glad to have finalized the agreement before he bows out of the service next week.
